PROBLEMS FACING EDUCATORS TOLD CHAMBER MONDAY

A. J. Rathbone, Principal, Outlines New Trends in Instruction

Members of tht Niles Chamber of Commerce Monday heard a clear, concise outline of the problems facing educators today, when A. J. Rathbone, principal of the Washington Union High school at Centerville, spoke on changing concepts of education, and tne place of the school in shifting times.

Rathbone, introduced as the "three-minute" speaker for the day, launched into his subject with the reading of several statements, taken from leading educational journals, which showed the trend of opinion among educators, on the ultimate outcome of present flux.

Calling attention to the background of our present philosophy of national life, Rathbone read the preamble of the Constitution, and cited numerous malignant facts that tend to nullify the rights guaranteed by it to the people of the nation. He stated that present conditions, have increased the educators' responsibility to the youngsters, in that the child must be equipped to cope with new stan-

LOCAL PEOPLE ESCAPE INJURY AS TRAIN SMASHES CAR

Failing to see or hear an approaching train at about 9:30 Tuesday morning, four well-known Niles people miraculously escaped serious injury, when their automobile was struck by the locomotive and tossed from the tracks. Those involved in the mishap were Mrs. Mamie Harvey, her small son, and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Duarte.

The accident occurred at the private grade crossing, on the driveway into the Duarte place just south of Overacker. Mrs. Harvey, driving, stated that she had looked carefully down the tracks, and was just turning her head to glance in the other direction when the train flashed upon her. The locomotive's projecting cylinder crashed into the hood of the car, smashing the engine and hurling the smaller vehicle into the ditch beside the tracks. Mrs. Harvey, and others in the car, stated that they heard no whistle or bell.

Duarte, an elderly man, was severely shaken, with possible minor internal injuries. His wife suffered a strain of the throat. Neither Mrs. Harvey nor the child were hurt. All were given treatment by Dr. N. Catherine Holden, Niles physician.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

By Norman H. Parks, Publisher Register

They Have No Shame!

The attempt of Washington township people to shame Supervisor Ralph V. Richmond into removing his boy from the county payroll, so far has been without avail. Equally futile has been the attitude of contempt and aversion unanimously bestowed upon the Ebrights for their persistence in both drawing handsome salaries from Alameda county, while hundreds of worthy and capable men and women are in dire want, and begging for work. Shame can't catch up with 'em.

Turning a cold shoulder upon a plea for humanitarian conduct, and a stony stare of indifference to an awakened public consciousness that demands decapitation for nepotism and the noose for the twin-devil in official crime —man-wife public employment—is neither good politics nor good morals. One only needs put his ear to the ground to catch the trend of opinion.

SCHOOL OFFICIALS VETO PROPOSAL TO INCREASE HEALTH SERVICE COSTS

$100,000 FINAL PAYMENT ON '34 'COTS NEXT WEEK

Returns To Association Growers Top Average Of Non-Members

A $100,000 final payment on 1934 Sunsweet apricots, to reach members of the California Prune and Apricot growers Association early next week, was announced at San Jose Monday by General Manager C. D. Cavallaro.

Showing season total payments well above the average received by non-association growers, schedules by size and grade are accompanying the checks. Net returns for average grade No. 1 Blenheims, the schedule shows, total 17 cents a pound.

The association is also making a substantial payment on all offgrade apricots delivered Cavallaro stated.

In addition, the association announces that on June 15 it will pay interest approximating $54,000 not normally due until June 30, to growers owning class D equities in the association and to those who recently received supplementary series C certificates.

It is expected that this advanced payment will be of material assistance to apricot growers in taking care of part of their harvesting expenses for the new crop.

Numerous association members in Washington township, apricot growing center, will benefit by the additional returns.

The Misses Virginia Willis, Antonia Espinosa and the latter's sister, Cecelia, of Hayward, were San Jose visitors Saturday evening.

Districts Refuse to Accept Added Burden Planned By Re-Adjustment

Concensus of opinion among southern Alameda county school trustees, concerning the proposal to raise the costs of health nurse services to the various school districts, is definitely for the negative, it is learned following a meeting of more than thirty-five principals and trustees at the Washington Union High School Tuesday night.

The stand of the local school authorities became apparent throughout the meeting in statements made by various trustees to the effect that the districts are set against paying the proposed $1.00 per student per average daily attendance. It was pointed out that the present cost to the districts averages 63c, and that should the Health Center feel inclined to set that sum to be paid per pupil, acceptance may be forthcoming.

Dr. I. O. Church, director of the health services in the unincorporated area, presenting the case for the Alameda County Health Center, stated that the proposed plan contemplated no change in personnel, services or salary of health nurses in the districts. He gave a resume of the history of health services in Alameda county, and stated that the cost of the service, en toto, for each pupil, was $2.16 at present. The proposal, refused by the trustees, would call for payment of $1.00 of this sum by the school districts, rather than the average of 53c paid at the present time. It was pointed out that the money for maintenance of the health service is taken from the general county fund, and not kept separately, thus making the source a single one. The health budget is

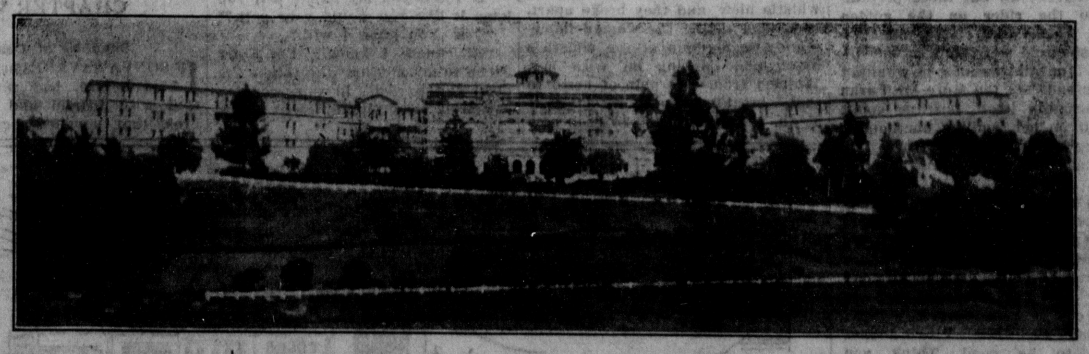
Feature Story on Masonic Home, Decoto



By JAMES H. HEATH
HOME CORRESPONDENT

To most readers of The Township Register, which presents each Thursday morning a carefully compiled summary of the news of Niles, where it is published, and covering particularly Centerville, Newark, Irvington, Mission San Jose, Alvarado, Decoto and Warm Springs, the beautiful view of the Masonic Home, near Decoto, two miles north of Niles, on the broad paved boulevard between San Jose and Oakland, is familiar, and yet presumably comparatively few of them have seen and know little of the building units of the institution in the immediate rear of those stately brick walls as seen by motorists and travelers by rail through this beautiful section of the wonderful Santa Clara valley.

It is a matter of general knowledge throughout Washington township that the site of the Masonic Home, consisting of 267 acres, was purchased in 1893 for approximately $82,641. Building operations were commenced in 1896 with the installation of six two-story frame houses, which are yet standing, partially occupied by employes of the home, outside the members. Like practically all the other units to be hereafter mentioned, these pioneer buildings can not be seen in passing the main entrance on the boulevard.

The wisdom of the establishment of the Home was very soon evident, and from time to time additional building units have been placed.

The main building, as seen from the valley to the west, has a front footage of 672 feet. These immense walls of brick, upon a super structure of steel, with reinforced concrete floors, together with an east wing and the brick two story men's dormitory, with around fifty rooms, and a hospital with a capacity of fifty persons, enclose the 368 members of the home family, of which 175 are women. Mention also should be made of the fact that the first floor of the Siminoff Temple, the gift of Morris Siminoff of San Francisco, is equipped with sleeping rooms for men.

The temple, by the way, was built in 1896 at a cost of $35,000. It is well adapted for lodge

FLAME OF THE BORDER

By VINGIE E. ROE....

COPYRIGHT DOUBLEDAY, DORAN & Co. Inc. W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Seeking death by throwing herself from the summit of Lone Mesa, to escape dishonor, at the hands of a drunken desperado, Sonya Savarin allows herself to be rescued by her suddenly sobered and repentant attacker. The girl is a self-appointed physician to the Navajo Indians, living on an Arizona sheep ranch with her brother Serge, his wife, Lila, and their small daughter, Babs. For a year she has been engaged to Rodney Blake, wealthy New Yorker, but her heart is with the friendless Navajos and she evades a wedding.

CHAPTER II.—Sonya pulls Little Moon, wife of Two Fingers, a Navajo, through the crisis of an illness. Two Fingers is deeply grateful.

CHAPTER III.—In the desert village, shopping, Sonya again meets the man whose advances she had repulsed on Lone Mesa. He tells her he bitterly regrets his action and has never had a minute's peace since that day. Sonya is affected, but unforgiving. She hears rumors of a Border bandit "El Capitan Diablo," who crucifies his "double-crossers" and has a dire reputation as a despoiler and murderer, vaguely connecting him with her attacker.

CHAPTER IV.—Sonya pays a visit to Little Moon and finds her well on her way to recovery. On her return she rides to the top of Lone Mesa. There she again comes upon the strange young man, but she no longer fears him. When he reiterates his sorrow over his misconduct she indicates forgiveness and assures him a man can always change for the better.

For that he was wrong—all wrong entirely—she had not the slightest doubt. Why did he meet a sky-ship here on this lonely desert? Why was he afraid for her to be seen by its occupants? What strange freight had he taken from it and put so carefully in his saddlebags?

There was something deep here, terribly deep, and it had to do, she felt sure, with the hinted things of the Servant's guarded speech—with that mysterious Presence across the Border which ruled so bloodily.

And why, she asked herself again, should all this weigh down her soul! Why should she, busy and happy in her daily life, betrothed to another man, care what this drunken wastrel did? No, she corrected herself, not drunken now. He had said he could not drink, and she believed him. And why should she believe him?

Gravely, in a sort of cold fear, she searched her inner depths, and what she dimly saw appalled her.

It was his eyes, she told herself, the look of his eyes when he spoke of these things. They were deep eyes, strange eyes, filled with a wild spirit, and under this wildness, this old devil-may-care which had characterized them, was something so desperate, so anxious, that Sonya would have staked her life on its truth.

Frightened to her foundations, the girl straightened in her saddle and lifted Darkness into his stride. She would forget this man, his eyes and his hands and the heady intoxication of the scent of him. She would write to Rod tonight, a long, good letter. She had neglected him a bit of late.

The next day Sonya went to town to mail her letter. She felt very virtuous and calm. All the strife and unease of the day before had gone from her. She had written dutifully to Rod and told him all the trivial happenings of every day—that is, all but those pertaining to the rider on the golden horse. These were of too small import, she told herself, wouldn't interest him. And besides, he wouldn't understand. At the store Mr. Parks was urbanity itself, bustling about to wait on her, smiling unctuously, rubbing his fat hands together.

"Good morning," she told him politely.

"It's always a good morning, Doctor Sonya," he said richly, "when we see you here. You don't get down too often. You goin' to the dance over to th' Neidlingers next Sat'day night? Bill Pingle from Big Town an' two others is goin' to furnish th' music. Accordion an' two fiddles. Ought to be good. Think you folks'll git over?"

"Why, yes," said Sonda, "I shouldn't wonder if we did. The Neidlingers always have such nice times at their ranch. Nice people."

"Sure are. An' th' more th' merrier, I always say."

In the room behind the store a man stood where the first sound of Sonya's voice had stopped him. The cigarette he had just rolled hung unsealed in his fingers. Until the girl had gone out, until the last sound of her feet on the boards had died away, until the sputter and roar of the old flivver lessened in the distance, he remained so. Then he flung the cigarette into the refuse barrel and went on out the back door.

Sonya Savarin loved the dances of the region.

Although liquid contraband flowed freely, and the cowboys from the upper country sometimes raised the rafters with their noise, there was something elemental and very young about these gatherings of the folk of the lonely land. The sheep men brought their wives and daughters, the whole family, in fact, down to the littlest ones, who slept in ranks on the wall benches as the night wore on, and everybody danced.

Serge Savarin and his womenfolk came a little late, having to drive 28 miles over roads that left a lot to be desired, and entered in the midst of a number.

Sonya, in a new dress, her dark face sparkling already, laid her wrap on Lila's shoulder and swung out on the floor in the arms of a perspiring cowboy.

She met these people only at the dances, but she remembered everyone and danced with all who asked her, provided they were not too far gone in the common hilarity. If so, she would merely laugh and shake her adorable black head with its shining curls and say gently, "No, Billy, I'm too tired to hold you up. Come around earlier next time"; or, "You're silly, Bob, just plumb silly. I think you're lit."

And young Bob, weaving on his booted feet, would tell her anxiously that he washn't near drunk, but he knew how she felt about it and didn't blame her a bit, not a shingle bit. Neither did he, nor anyone else whom she refused a dance. It was enough that she was there to look at, the most beautiful woman in all the country, the highest-up, yet the sweetest to everyone that a man could ask for. Everyone knew of her and her work among the lowly. Her little fame was sweet in the land.

So Sonya danced and laughed and listened to the music of the violins, the gay accordion, with her arm on this lean shoulder and that, and was extremely happy. She forgot the sorrows of the world and lived her youth to its full extent. Forgot Rod Blake and New York city and the man of Lone Mesa, all of which had troubled her of late.

Lila was dancing, and so was Serge, and Babs was already dead to the world on a bench in the corner, covered with Lila's cape. The music was waxing more "hot" and furious. And by the door a man came suddenly into her range of vision, a tall man, slim-hipped and graceful. He was in store clothes, and the eternal cigarette hung in his fingers, its spiral of smoke ascending in a tiny stream, but she knew him instantly. As instantly the almost terrible thrill shot through her from head to toe, blurring her eyes a bit, catching her throat with a little pain.

Suddenly the music changed, some one yelled "Paul Jones!" and the circling couples broke like the colors in a kaleidoscope. They strung out in a huge oval, all holding hands, and began going to the right in time to the lively tune. A whistle blew, and they broke apart, each man taking the woman immediately facing him at the whistle's blast, and dancing on with her. Whirled from this pair of arms to that, breaking step, catching it again, suiting her step to each new partner's, the girl felt as if a wave of portent was bearing down upon her. Something was going to happen—something terrible and wonderful—she was afraid and exhilarated as she had never been in her life before—and here he was coming toward her in the line. He danced as she might have known he would, like the wind blowing in long grass—she could see him sway as he weaved in and out in "alaman-left"—and the whistle blew, and he was here, before her. Her hand was in his, his arm had gone about her, they were drifting away together—and all the lights on the walls were running together in a long blur.

Sonya held her breath and let it out in a long sigh, and felt suddenly the trembling of his arms.

Then the whistle blew again, and some one else had caught her hand, and she was circling right once more in the long oval.

When the number was over she went dizzily to where Lila sat fanning her flushed cheeks and sat down beside her. She wanted to rest, to gather herself together, to still the shameful tumult of her heart.

Some one claimed her, and Sonya went back to the maze of moving figures, but everywhere she went she was conscious of the brilliant eyes of this man. He stood against the wall a little beyond the main door, and he seemed to be alone. He did not dance again, even though there was another Paul Jones, but watched her in a grave stillness, and Sonya could not gather her faculties for her usual light banter.

What was the matter with her?

Why did her heart hammer in her breast with long slow beats, her blood flow through her veins like molten gold drenched in perfume?

What was happening to her? To her life itself? To her destiny and her hopes?

Tears came to her eyes, and she did not hear what her chance partner was saying. Fear was in her heart, and a certain terrible fire that mounted and grew. Time passed, and she was not conscious of it.

Finally, late in the night, the fiddles struck up "Home, Sweet Home," and the dance was over. This was the last number. A cowboy from the K Bar Z with whom she always liked to dance was asking her for it. She had just held out her hand when some one reached forward from the side and took it. Next moment she was gone out along the floor in the dreamy rhythm of the old sweet tune, and this time she was held so close that she could feel the beating of his heart, a thundering reverberation like tides on the shore. Desperately she raised her eyes and looked at him.

"Tell me," she whispered thickly, "what are you? Who are you?"

"Nothing," he said bitterly, "to you. Nothing—ever—and I'd give half my life to kiss one curl on your head—with a decent man's right."

The words came through his set teeth, and even in the tensity of the moment she noticed that he did not slur his words at the ends.

"Then be decent!" she cried passionately. "Be decent!"

"Too late. I'm only looking in windows—from the outside—and I built the wall between, myself."

"Tell me your name," she said, "tell me."

"No."

"Yes. Tell me now."

"I can't. I haven't a name—any more."

"You have. Your own name. Not what you—you go by—where—where you answer roll call."

"Answer roll call! That's good. What do you know about me? What have you heard?"

"Nothing. I'm guessing, fitting things in place," she said swiftly, "and there's somebody across the Border who crucifies—"

"Hush! For God's sake, don't speak of that again, ever, anywhere! Where did you hear of—such?"

"No matter. There is—and some way you're connected! It cuts me like a knife—you've got to tell me. Who are you?"

"If I tell you my name, will you keep it like you would your oath?"

"Yes. You know I will."

"Of course I know. I'm Starr Stone to my mother, who thinks I'm dead and buried. In this—country—I go by something different. Now are you satisfied?"

"No. I've got to know the rest. I will know it."

"Why? Heaven knows, you have little to thank me for—little to think of me for. I've blackened your first memory of me beyond all hope."

"Why do you speak carelessly sometimes and now correctly?"

"I've been two men. I am two men."

"What kind of men?"

"What does it matter? I'm a dead man—dead and damned and rotten! Don't trouble your darling head about me. I'm running true to form right now in being here, in holding you in my arms, in looking in your face. If anyone this side of the Border—anyone who counted—knew me, I'd not have done it. There's that much decency left in me. But no one knows, and I'm like a dying man begging for water. I come back to look at you again and again. I'd crawl on my knees around the world to change my—leopard spots," he finished bitterly, "to look in your eyes with a clear conscience."

Suddenly the fire and the fear and the ecstasy which had warred in Sonya all night seemed to rise above her like a tide of sorrow and disaster. She felt as if she sank in swirling waters, drowned in tears.

Her throat closed with an aching pain and one hard sob escaped her.

Instantly the man looked down, holding her from him.

"My G—d!" he said, "what—what—Why, my G—d!"

Then he drew her to him close and hard, and the trembling of his arms intensified. The face above her small black head had gone haggard as an old man's.

The last soft strains of the tender tune were dying.

The feet of the dancers slowed.

And suddenly from nowhere, out of the very night beyond the doors, it seemed, a hand fell on his shoulder, a powerful grasp whirled him about, Sonya with him.

A stranger stood there, a stranger so fierce and terrible in aspect that one knew him at once for a man of violence, of cruelty and death.

It was in his small black eyes above his olive cheeks black with shaven beard, in his hawkbill nose, in his thin-lipped mouth merciless as a panther's. He stood six feet two in his spurred boots, and he wore the wide sombrero of the Mexican hidalgo, fine of material and ornamented with silver. A studded belt circled his narrow waist; a braided velvet jacket showed the muscled strength of his wide shoulders.

He was a Mexican, and a bad one, if ever one of that brand lived.

He spoke and the man before him stood rooted to the spot, his arm still around the girl.

"Hombre," he said, in Spanish, "you disobey! Let's go."

And turning, he walked swiftly to the door. The arm slid from Sonya's shoulders, and without a backward look the Man of Lone Mesa followed. Alone, her feet like lead, her head whirling with a strange dizziness, her throat aching, Sonya crossed the almost empty floor and picked up her coat from where Lila was waking Babs.

Serge joined them, and they went out into the night among the roaring cars of the departing crowd.

Just as they passed out of the circle of light from the open doors a fantastic figure loomed for a moment beside them, its shabby garments and long white hair dim in the blending shadows.

"Beelzebub," said the soft voice of the Servant, "leaves hell to work evil hereabouts. Beware, innocent one."

"What in thunder—" said Serge. "Who was that?"

"Only a strange old man I met at Myra's. You know—the old mad preacher who rides the Reservation on his donkeys. You've heard of him."

"Oh, the Servant of the Lord? Yes, I have. Never saw him before, though. Well, let's get going, girls. Babs, lazybones, sit up while daddy fixes the robe for you. That's the girl."

CHAPTER VI

Shadows of Death.

IF SONYA SAVARIN had been troubled before, had searched her soul with fearful and bewildered eyes, that summer night plunged her into chaos. Shame was in her, and a breathless flame of ecstasy, and a fear that mounted hourly.

And knowledge.

Knowledge, terrible, complete, devastating.

Destiny had reached and taken her, body and soul.

All that her life had meant was gone—her plans, her future, everything. Rod Blake, New York, safety and assurance, the sane and ordered things of everyday, they were all swept into the discard like so much trash.

And in their place stood Starr Stone—her blood leaped at her first conscious use of his name—renegade, mystery, what she did not know—and with him danger, wrong, disaster. He had touched her with his mysterious power, and she had turned and followed him. In her soul she had turned and followed. Like a bird charmed to its death, she had bent her eyes on his, and she was lost.

There was nothing in this world but Starr Stone's face, the blue light of his eyes, the curve of his lips, the grace of his lean body.

Rod Blake was a dream, a fantasy. His face was a stranger's face, his voice a far-off echo. There was nothing real about him, had never been to her, she knew now. There was nothing real but this man, this renegade, this outlaw who followed where a master led, and left behind him a great flare of light that glowed with shadows in her heart.

Fire and flame and darkness, joy and ecstasy and sorrow, fear and a vast strength, these were her portion, new given to her.

Presently she pushed her hair back from her forehead, went to the pool in the dark corner and, kneeling, washed her face with her hands. It was a strange baptism of abnegation, of acceptance. Whatever was to happen in the new future she was committed to it body and soul. Whatever happened to Starr Stone would happen to her; that she knew beyond all questioning.

Next morning she met Lila with a grave face, and the smart little woman looked at her and set down the cup she held.

"You may as well come clean, Sonya darling," she said gently. "Not to, will only prolong the agony."

"I know," Sonya said soberly. "Come out in the patio. There's still time before we have to begin supper."

And there, with the sun going down the western sky and the shadows lengthening about them Sonya told the story of the Man of Lone Mesa, and Lila listened with inheld breath.

At its close they looked silent at each other.

"You will understand, but Serge

Sonya Told the Story of the Man of Lone Mesa, and Lila Listened With Inheld Breath.

never will," said Sonya, "so we'll not tell him until we have to."

Lila laid her hand on Sonya's arm.

"GOLDEN PLY" CUTS DANGER OF HIGH SPEED BLOWOUTS

"There are a few basic facts about tires which people do not know because they have never stopped to think about them," says R. J. Loomis, San Francisco district manager of the B. F. Goodrich Company.

Loomis points out that the tire is the only contact between car and road, and is subjected to almost every type of strain imaginable. He states that a tire undergoes "genuine punishment," for a cotton and rubber article, and while the modern tire is built to stand hard use, there is a limit to what they can stand.

Leon and Cyrus Solon, Goodrich dealers in this district, amplify Loomis' statements concerning tire strain, and point to the "Golden Ply" construction of the Goodrich Silvertown tire which cuts high speed blowouts to one-third, and make driving far safer.

A LIFE-SAVING TIRE

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR GOLDEN PLY BLOW-OUT PROTECTION

Get Months of Extra Tire Mileage with Safety

● DON'T RIDE ON DYNAMITE! Don't take chances with dangerous, high-speed blow-outs when Goodrich Safety Silvertowns will give you Life-Saver Golden Ply blow-out protection. Here's how these blow-outs happen. The terrific heat generated inside the tire causes rubber and fabric to separate. Heat blisters form, and grow bigger and bigger until BANG—a blow-out! But these blisters don't form in Safety Silvertowns. The Life-Saver Golden Ply resists internal heat—rubber and fabric don't separate, and these high-speed blow-outs are prevented before they start. Get this real blow-out protection now!

Extra-Thick Anti-Skid Tread

And Goodrich Silvertowns give you protection against those dangerous "tail-spin" skids. Just press your hand down on the deep-grooved Silvertown tread. Feel the big, husky cleats grab. Then you'll know why Silvertowns give you such protection against skidding.

What's more, this rugged Safety Silvertown tread wears longer—gives months more mileage at no extra cost.

One of the outstanding social events of the season in this district, the Toyon Branch Garden party, held Saturday afternoon in the gardens of the J. C. Shinn home, attracted numerous people from all points in the bay region, in addition to those of this area.

Mrs. J. R. Whipple, in speaking of the day stated her entire satisfaction with the affair, and expressed her gratitude to the community, and particularly those merchants and businessmen who contributed items for the various sales. Mrs. Whipple stressed the value of the assistance rendered by the Niles Boy Scout troop, and the Camp Fire Girls.

GROWERS HEAR TALK ON PRORATE PLAN FOR TOMATOES

Tomato growers of Washington township gathered at the Centerville high school Tuesday night to hear B. H. Shepley, representative of the vegetable department of the California Farm Bureau Federation, discuss the advantages of the California pro rate act, as applied to tomatoes. The meeting was conducted by H. Young, chairman of the Alameda County Farm Bureau. Paul Daugherty, high school instructor, is secretary.

Shepley spoke regarding the efforts of the vegetable department to bring about a statewide proration on tomatoes. He explained the method of procedure, and said that work has been progressing satisfactorily in all nineteen counties included in the area to be covered.

Shepley pointed out advantages of the plan to growers, and cleared up a number of misunderstandings, particularly among the growers of canning varieties, who have recently contracted their tomatoes, and who feared that they would be restricted in delivery.

The prorate plan, Shepley said would prevent market fluctuations, and glutting, and stabilize the price to grower and consumer alike. He pointed out that the cost of administering the plan will be bourne by the growers themselves, inasmuch as no funds are available. Last year the cost to growers was one and one-half cents per standard lug.

He was optimistic over the prospects of signing the necessary two-thirds of total acreage needed to make the plan operative. Petitions are being circulated at the present time, by local growers.

AN AVERAGE monthly bill of $4.74, with Half-Off on Extra electricity, gives to the Hutchings' home the modern, convenient services of the electric range, electric water heater, refrigerator, washing machine, lighting and additional smaller appliances. Read this letter from the Hutchings:

"Since the half-off plan has been in effect, we have enjoyed some very pleasing discounts on our electric bill.

"The electric range, water heater, refrigerator and washing machine which we installed last fall are all the more comfort and convenience now that your company is making such a bargain of electricity.

"The new appliances are operating on the extra electricity plan, and so far have cost very little to run. The total bill for January was $7.73 less the $2.73 discount or net $5.00. The February bill netted $4.69 while the March bill with the $2.54 discount was only $4.53.

In a report of the Memorial Poppy sales, Mrs. Geneva Smith, chairman, told the members of the unit this week, that while there are still a few of the small red flowers to be sold, the drive in this district was a success. The emblems sold here had been made by disabled veterans at the Livermore sanitarium.

Mrs. Nell Myers, chairman of the Poppy dance, high spot in the unit calendar, stated that the affair, held Saturday night at the Memorial building, attracted a large number of local people.

Previous to the dance on Saturday night, Mr. and Mrs. Manuel Swartz and Mrs. Rose Vieux, attended the opening hour of the Oakland Food Show. The initial program was sponsored by the Tenth District of the American Legion.

TOWNSHIP TEAMS WARMING UP FOR FINAL CONTESTS

Second Half of League Play to Get Under Way Next Sunday

Baseball fans in southern Alameda county, left with conjectures about the potential winner of the south county league at the end of the first half, will be given their second big dose of good baseball, starting Sunday, when the league participants will take up the willow for the final series.

Although Newark, winner of the first half, will be rated near the top of the list, a strengthening of several other nines promises to make the schedule far more interesting than before. Decoto, an early weak sister, has acquired the pitching services of Frank Mederios, high school ace, who is expected to furnish the spark this time. Niles, with a full-strength team, should come along quickly, some fans being of the opinion that victory is assured for the local aggregation. Manager Clarence Pine, usually very modest, goes so far as to predict a number of consecutive wins.

Newark and Alvarado, who finished one-two last half, are both strong teams.

Irvington and Pleasanton, smarting under defeats that held them in the cellar last time, are working over their line-ups. Irvington, needing only a catcher to round out their squad, may get Joe Robello, formerly with Niles. Robello, a steady player, is a good hitter, in addition to having an arm like a steel spring.

League officials state that the second half should see a more even distribution of wins and losses. H. L. Scott, president, and founder of the circuit, is pleased with the outlook. He is displaying the trophy, to be awarded the victor by the Niles Chamber of Commerce. A figure of a player, poised on the top of an onyx pedestal, the award will be a permanent one.

The schedule of games to get under way Sunday, is as follows:

May 26: Alvarado at Niles, Newark at Decoto, Irvington at Pleasanton.

June 2: Niles at Newark, Decoto at Irvington, Pleasanton at Alvarado.

June 16 Newark at Alvarado, Irvington at Niles, Decoto at Pleasanton.

June 23 Alvarado at Irvington, Decoto at Niles, Pleasanton at Newark.

June 28 Decoto at Alvarado, Niles at Pleasanton, Irvington at Newark.

The championship game, between Newark and the winner of the second half—if other than Newark—will be played on July 4, at the Washington Township Fair grounds, under the auspices of the Centerville Lions Club.

MORE ON SCHOOL OFFICIALS

prepared previous to the allotment of funds to the districts.

Whether the health center will make the $1.00 per pupil cost mandatory, and withdraw the health service from schools refusing to sign the new contracts, or well bend to the wishes of school authorities and equalize the costs at a lower figure, will be known later, after Doctor Church reports on the matter to the health board, headed by Doctor Black.

Need for some sort of equalization was noted, trustees said, after the present set-up was analyzed. Under the present plan, several small schools, with few pupils, are paying as much or more than larger schools for health services. In fact, some of the smaller schools are already paying more than $1.00 per pupil, and would be in favor of the change.

The meeting was conducted by James L. Bunker, representing the office of the county superintendent of schools.

JUNIOR CHAMBER THEATER PARTY HERE ON JUNE 7

Ond-Time Pictures Of Township Selected At Pre-View

Progress of Washington township, as recorded by motion pictures will be shown at the Niles Theatre on Friday night, June 7, when the Niles Junior Chamber of Commerce holds its first theatre party, featuring old time movies of Niles and the surrounding towns.

Gathering at the theatre Tuesday night, members of the civic group selected the films to be shown, at a pre-view including all old pictures available. Pictures taken eight and five years ago, showing industrial activities, and affairs in Washington township, with numerous local people in the scenes, were chosen for the showing.

At the meeting of the Junior chamber to be held Monday night at the Florence restaurant, a portion of the business meeting will be given to a discussion of the street cleaning plan, suggested last time.

Members of the group, after long and arduous work, the jubilant over the completion of the Niles hill sign. The last coat of white cement was laid over the huge letters this week. A few touches will finish the task, according to Guid Tuana, who directed the work. The monument is visible to the bay shore.

Has Part in Scout Play Tuesday Night

Jack Townsend, former Niles boy, now living with his parents at Campbell, visited friends in Niles Saturday. He was graduated from the Washington Union High school last year, is now a student at the San Mateo Junior college, where he is taking an interest in journalism.

Townsend, who was interested in Boy Scout work while here, has taken up scouting at Campbell. He was a member of the cast in a three-act comedy, staged by the Campbell scout troop, as part of the program of the La Rinconada district court of honor held in the Los Gatos school auditorium, Tuesday evening.

SMALL BUILDING AT NURSERY BURNS SATURDAY

Breaking out shortly before midnight Saturday, a fire of unknown origin, destroyed a small building on the California Nursery property, at Niles. The structure, one of the original ones built by John Rock, founder of the nursery, was being used as the cook house for employees.

Unobserved by nursery workers until they had attained headway, the flames had completely enveloped the building before the Niles firemen arrived. The firefighters were unable to save the place, but remained on the scene to guard nearby buildings, making up the main group of the original structures. A westerly breeze, taking the embers away from other buildings, prevented a more serious loss, firemen said.

The building had been substituted as the cook house many years ago, when the original office and kitchens were destroyed by fire. The present office was built at that time.

Editorial Comment

NORMAN H. PARKS, Publisher Register

Surrounded by satraps and boyars, Richmond may believe he can continue to do as he pleases, and yet, next fall, weather the storm. But he cannot. If his true friends dared to inform—friends who are not whispering sweet nothingness into his official ear, fearful if they do not abjectly flatter it will be the end of their county pay checks—he would learn just how fast he is slipping.

The editor of the Township Register believes that a year ago, not a dozen men in the district might have given Richmond even an interesting race for re-election, had the balloting been done then. It is equally our unprejudiced opinion that if the election were to be held tomorrow, any reputable citizen of ordinary talents, could beat him two-to-one. This is not an idle conclusion. For two months we have been out collecting subscriptions and talking politics with farmers and business men and housewives. Have no illusions, the people are angry about the Richmond lad drawing $165 a month. If he were drawing but $5.00 a month the people generally would believe he was being overpaid. But it is not so much a question of the amount of his salary, as it is that he is the child of a county official.

Richmond may continue to ignore the storm-clouds, refuse to admit shame (while all his friends are shamed for him) but next summer he shall learn the truth of our words—learn them when learning them will be too late.

As for the Ebrights, one or the other is going to lose the official pay envelope. Their services in Washington township are not wanted, and sooner or later those responsible for their continuation on the public payroll will yield to public opinion. To ignore the demand for their removal will mean several thousand votes going wrong on election day. You may talk blandly of civil service regulations. That this or that cannot be done. It is poppycock! Civil service is a fine institution among friends. But when a chief wants to get a subordinate out of his way, it's away with the subordinate, and damn be the civil service rules so much prated about when of ficials care not to act but to hide behind this old woman's skirts.

The Register, at a later date, will point out to certain public officials just what Washington township citizens want done with one or both of the Ebrights. This paper trusts, however, before that becomes necessary, this flagrant abuse—this staggering family salary of $435 a month—will be abolished, and one or the other, or both, will be put back into private life, with the same chances and the same risks confronting all red-blooded Americans who stand on their own feet, and take life's rebuffs on the chin, with a grin.

Then there's the hospital, also a gift to the Home, and which represents an expenditure of $50,000. Increasing demands for additional room warrants the planning of finishing the unfinished portion of the building. Needless to say that while only minor surgical operations are perfonmed there, the hospital is an important adjunct. At present nine nurses are employed.

Also an important unit of the plant is a building which houses the dining room on the second floor and the assembly hall on the third, each with a seating capacity of about 400.

Close by the dining hall is the section of the building referred to as the large kitchen and bakery. The basement of this unit is devoted to a drug store, a sewing room, a barber shop and huge store room.

All the units, aside from the men's dormitory, and the temple, are covered by roofs without a break. As to more of what's inside these various units, more may be said at a later date.

The chicken yard, with a capacity of 5000 birds, the barn and garages, the sewage treating plant, nursery and reservoirs are in the minor lists of buildings.

Then, too, there are the tiny homes which house numerous hives of honey bees.

All in all, there's a whole lot to be seen of the Masonic Home plant which can not conveniently be seen without "driving in."

And Frank B. Hartman, the efficient superintendent for 26 years, says the main gate is never closed to visitors, who are always cordially welcomtd.

ST. MARY'S SILVER JUBILEE PLANNED FOR JUNE 2

The annual home-coming, at the St. Mary's of the Palms school, at Mission San Jose, will have an added significance this year, when alumnae gather to celebrate the silver jubilee of the institution, on Sunday, June 2.

The white, earthquake-proof building, situated on the Mission San Jose-Irvington road, was first occupied in 1910, when resident pupils could no longer be accommodated in the convent. The present building and grounds, located about one-quarter of a mile from the Josephinum or original school, command a panoramic view of the town of Mission San Jose, the Coast range and the bay region.

Exceptional recreational facilities, out-of-door life, climate and ease of access to three cities combine to augment the advantages of St. Mary's as an outstanding Catholic school for girls. There is instruction in kindergarten, elementary grades and high school department.

Many outstanding women, leaders in social and religious movements in California, are numbered among the alumnae of the local school. All have been making preparations in anticipation of the "red-letter" day on June 2. The alumnae meet every year on the Sunday within the octave of the Ascension.

Committees, under the direction of Mrs. Frances Mendelson, Miss Claire Brady, Miss Alice Winslow, Miss Elsie Pietrucci, and others, will hold a short business session before the afternoon program.

A special type of entertainment will be presented by the pupils of the school, consisting of a three-act play, "The Step Sisters," by the ninth grade, and "Majestic Gifts," another skit, by the eighth grade girls. The St. Mary's Glee Club will feature several chorouses and a dance by the smaller girls will conclude the program.

Those who will take part in "Mystical Gifts:" Isabelle Chamorro, Margaret Grey, Betty Blonder, Katherine Flannery, Ruth DeLilse, Shirley Murphy.

Cast of "Step Sisters:" Barbara Anne Carr, Emidia Cavalli Betty Blonder, Betty LaMarr, Katherine Flannery, Margaret Grey, Mary Anne Dittle, Cynthia McIntyre, Selma Bladh, Rose Mathat, Virginia Lawler, Maxine Nelson.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Oliver, of Niles, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brown, of Oakland, spent Sunday on the Monterey penninsula. They drove over the Seventeen Mile Drive, and stopped for a time at Point Lobos, recently made a national monument.

dards. In telling of new foundations for education, Rathbone declared that emphasis must be placed on training for unselfishness, and responsibility for the welfare of one's neighbors. He stated that new ideals, criteria and courses will take the place of those now of a past day. In closing, the principal declared his faith in the youth, and in the schools, to come through into the new day successfully.

Previous to Rathbone's address, Chamber President Grau called for committee reports, and on recommendation of the group, discharged the committee recently appointed to arrange for participation in the Livermore Rodeo parade. The civic group voted to forego the Livermore affair, in order to concentrate on their participation in the Washington Township Fair.
